HIC (I.), haec, hoc, demonstr. pron. [contr. from hi-ce, hae-ce, ho-ce]. This—it denotes that which is nearest at hand, either in space or time, or in one's conception. Sometimes the original and more emphatic form (hice, hujusce, hasce, etc.) is met = this here; and, with the interrogative particle 'ne,' it becomes 'hicine' (not hicine). For the purpose of greater emphasis, it is sometimes combined with other pronouns; as, h. idem, hoc ipsum; huic illi legato, hunc talem virum.—In particular:

1) In opp. to 'ille' and other pronouns, it denotes the last named or mentioned of two or more objects — this, the latter; freq., however, it denotes the first named or mentioned, if the object referred to is the nearer to the person speaking or writing, in respect to place, time, or other circumstance — that, the former: cave Catoni anteponas Socratem; hujus enim (sc. Catonis) facta, illius (sc. Socratis) dicta laudantur (written by Cicero, as a Roman).

2) It denotes, in gen., that which is nearest to the person speaking or writing: A) of time — a) the present, the actual, of our times: haec annona, during the present scarcity; opus in hac magnificentia conspiciendum, even in the magnificence of our times; qui haec vituperare volent, the present condition of the state — b) to denote time just elapsed = from the present time, since, ago: his decem annis, ten years since; ante hos tres annos, three years ago; hoc biennio, within two years from now: B) (colloq., instead of ego, like the Greek ἐγώ) of the person speaking = this, this man here, myself: huic homini parata erant verbera, for me; tu si hic sis, if you were in my place; on the other hand, ne tu hic fueris (of a person just named), may you never be such an one, in his place.

3) Freq. it points to something following: A) like 'is,' with a relat. pron., but with a stronger reference to what is present: quam quisque novit artem, in hac se exerceat: B) with an object-sentence, whose purport 'hic' in this case intimates and introduces: hoc ille videt, non esse, etc.; thus, likewise, with 'quod' or 'quia,' 'ut' or 'ne,' following: C) freq. in enumerating, or in quoting the language of any one = the following: his verbis eum allocutus est.

4) A) hoc est, that is to say, that is, namely — for the purpose of explaining something preceding: honos amplissimus, hoc est consulatus: B) (poet.) hoc erat quod, etc. ? was this the reason why ? was it on this account, that ? C) the n. ting. with a genit.: quid hoc hominis, negotii est ? what sort of a person is this ? what sort of an affair ? hoc commodi est quod, etc., the advantage is, that, &c.; hoc copiarum, these troops: D) (ante-cl.) the neut. hoc is sometimes used pleonastically with impers. verbs: hoc lucebit, the day is breaking: E) (poet.) hoc = huc (q. v.).

HIC (II.), adv. loci (emphatic, and originally written Hice) [hic I.]. Here, on this spot, in this place: h. assum; with a genit., h. viciniae, here in this neighbourhood, hereabouts. Hence: A) = on this occasion, on this point, in this matter, here: hic, quantum in bello fortuna possit, cognosci potuit; h. ego nunc de Macedoniae praetore nihil dicam amplius; h. Laelius (inquit): B) (poet.) at this moment, hereupon, then.

IMUS — v. Inferus.

IN (I), prep. [tr, eis = tr]. I. With an abl., to denote a resting in or upon any thing — in, upon. 1) Of space, in, upon, at a place: esse in Sicilia, in urbe, in foro; sedere in solio; coronam habere in capite; ponere aliquid in mensa; .freq., in Sequania, in the country of the S.; trop., in eo loco sunt res nostrae, our affairs are in this position. Hence: A) of something that is found in or with a person or thing — in, with: Caesaris nomen obscurius erat in barbaris; erat in illo summa doctrina; in hoc homine admiror eloquentiam: B) of a multitude to which a person or thing belongs — among: sapientissimus in Graecis; habere aliquid in bonis, to count among: C) (poet.) of a being in something, i. e., a being covered wholly or in part by clothes, ornaments, arms, &c.: in armis excubare, armed, in arms; in orepidis procedere, in slippers; in rosa potare, crowned with roses; in vinculis esse. 2) Of time: A) = in, at: in omni aetate, at all times, in every age; in tali tempore, under such circumstances; so, also, in gravissimis ejus temporibus: B) = in the course of, during, in: in paucis tempestatibus; also, in pueritia, in bello, in pace; bis in die, twice a day: C) in tempore, at the right time, in time. 3) Of other relations, to denote a being in a certain condition or situation — in: A) in magno aere alieno, involved in heavy debts: in summo timore omnium, whilst all were in great fear; in tantis tuis occupationibus, notwithstanding your great occupations; in tanta hominum perfidia, since men are so faithless: B) in vicio esse, to be wrong; res est in integro, in facili = est integra, facilis; res in eodem genere est, is of the same kind; esse in eadem pulchritudine, to be just as beautiful; in eadem sententia, to be of the same opinion; in summa quatuor, in the whole; in parte, in part: C) in gen. = in respect of, as to: idem in bono servo dici potest; freq., also, with a gerund. = at, in: in deliberando, in deliberating; in literis dandis, in writing letters; thus, likewise, nobere hostibus in agris vastandis, by laying waste the fields; occupatus in scribendo: D) = toward: facere aliquid in aliquo; talis fuit in illo: E) = before: in oculis alicujus, before one's eyes.

II. With an acc., to denote motion to or into (opp. to ex — cf. ad, which denotes only approximation to an object). 1) Of space, into, to: ire in illam urbem; mittere in ultimas gentes; ascendere, suspicere in coelum, up to; confugere in aram, to the altar; spectare, vergere in orientem, toward the rising sun, toward the East 2) Of time: A) to denote the length of time for which any thing has been fixed — for: petere aliquid in annum; invitare aliquem in posterum diem; in perpetuum, for ever; in futurum, for the future; in praesens, for the present; praedicere in multos annos; (lat.) in tempus, for awhile: B) to denote the time until which any thing lasts — until: in multam noctem, deep into the night; in multum diei, until broad daylight. 3) In other relations, where a direction into or toward any thing is more or less implied: A) of measure, sex pedes in longitudinem, in length: B) of division, dividere in tres partes, into three parts: C) of distribution, in singulos annos, for every year, from year to year; thus, likewise, in singulos dies, or merely in dies, day by day, daily; mutabilis in diem, every day; sextantes in capita conferre, for each person: D) (mostly lat.) to denote design — for: uti cibo in voluptatem; legere id in certamen; in exemplum; pecunia data in rem militarem; in honorem alicujus: E) to denote a disposition towards, or a personal relation to, any thing — for, towards: amor in patriam; indulgentia in liberos; merita in patriam, in behalf of; vim habere in aliquid, to have influence upon; oratio in aliquem, against one; but, hoc dicitur in philosophiam, epigramma in aliquos, of, concerning: F) disputare in utramque partem, on both sides, pro and con; multa dicuntur in hanc sententiam, in this sense, to this effect; in eas leges, upon these conditions; thus, likewise (Tac.), in haec munera, upon the condition that these presents be brought; senatus consultum fit in haec verba, in these words: G) servilem in modum, like slaves; in urbium modum, like towns: H) adverbially, in universum (mostly lat.), in general; in speciem, for show; in tantum, so much; in incertum, while the matter was uncertain.

III. After 'esse' and 'habere,' the prep. 'in' is sometimes followed by an acc., when the abl. ought to be expected — in these instances the previous motion or act by which a person or thing has come into a specified condition is chiefly thought of: esse in potestatem alicujus, to be in one's power; habere in potestatem suam, to have in one's power; habere in mentem, in conspectum; esse in usum, to be in use, to be used; habere aliquem in custodiam; habere in animum (more freq. in animo), to have in mind, to intend. On the other hand, the abl. occurs instead of the acc.: e. g., arma comportabantur in templo = they were, after being brought together, kept in the temple.

A gaining, acquiring, pecuniae. 2) Gain, profit (from trade, &c. — conf. compendium, luorum, fructus): illae res quæstui sunt alicui, one makes a traffic of these things, uses them for profit; thus, also, quæstui habere rem publicam, to make one's self rich by the administration of public affairs; pecuniam relinquere in quæstu, at interest; omnes homines ad suum quæstum callent et fastidiunt, every one looks to his own interest. 3) A business, occupation, trade; freq., facere q. = to be a prostitute.

QUA-LIBET, adv. 1) Where you will, everywhere. 2) As you please, in any way.

QUALIS, e, adj. [from quam, like talis from tam]. 1) Interr., of what kind or sort? what kind of? what? 2) Relat., usually preceded by 'talis,' yet also when a sentence with 'talis' is implied, but not expressed, of such a kind, such as: in hoc bello, quale bellum nulla barbaria gessit, the like of which. Hence: A) in quotations = as for example: B) (poet.) = qualiter, just as: qualis Philomela queritur. 3) Indef., tech. t. in philosophy, having some quality.

QUALIS-CUNQUE, leconque, adj. 1) Relat., of whatever kind. 2) Indef., any whatever.

QUALITAS, âtis, f. [qualis]. (Formed by Cicero, as a translation of ποιότης.) A quality, property: in verbis genera et qq., moods.

QUALITER, adv. [qualis]. (Poet. & lat.) 1) Interr., in what way? how? 2) Relat., just as, as.

QUALITER-CUNQUE, adv. (Lat.) 1) Relat., in what way soever, howsoever. 2) Indef., in any way soever.

QUALUM, i, n., or QUALUS, i, m. [câlâtes]. A wicker-basket or hamper.

QUAM, adv. [qui]. I. Interr. — In direct and indirect questions, and in exclamations, how, how much, to what a degree: quam sint morosi, intelligis; q. cupiunt laudari! q. nihil prætermittis! II. Relat. — 1) Answering to 'tam,' which sometimes is not expressed, but only implied, as: non tam facile q. tu arbitraris; homo mon, q. isti sunt, gloriosus, not as vain-glorious as these are; mors q. acerba tam tristis, as bitter as sad. Hence: A) with superlatives with or without 'possum,' to denote the highest degree possible (cf. possum): gratias q. maximas egit; q. primum, as soon as possible; constituerunt se-mentes q. maximas facere: B) (ante-cl. & lat.) with superlatives and comparatives, but rendered by the English comp. = the ... the ...: q. paucissimos reliqueris, tam optimi fuit, the fewer you leave, the better they become; magis q. id reputo, tam magis uror, the more I consider it, the more. &c.; sometimes the comp. 'magis' is not expressed; sometimes 'tam' is omitted, or 'tanto' used instead of it; sometimes 'quam' answers, instead of 'quantus,' to a preceding 'tantus.' 2) Of comparison: A) after comparatives, than: is major est quam tu; sometimes it stands after the positive of an adjective, in which case 'magis' is to be supplied: tacita bona est mulier q. loquens (instead of melior); claris majoribus q. vetustis (instead of magis claris, etc.); so, also, with other words: pacem q. bellum probabam (supply 'potius' or 'magis'); B) after other words involving a comparison — a) after 'secus,' 'alius,' with a negation, instead of the more freq. 'nisi' — b) after 'supra,' 'ultra' = more than — c) multiplex q. pro numero, far greater than might be expected from the number; dimidium tributi q. quod, etc., half of the tribute that, &c.; haud centesimam partem q. quod, etc., of what, &c.; sometimes the first part of the comparison (e. g., alius) is omitted: ne quis Asiae rex sit q. ille, some one else than he, &c. — d) contra quam dixerat, contrary to what he had said — e) aeque quam, so much ... as: nihil aeque eos terruit, quam robur ac color imperatoris — f) tyrannus q. qui unquam saevissimus, as cruel a tyrant as there ever was — g) sometimes instead of q. si: haud secus q. inhorreret acies, as if: C) freq. denoting succession of time, esp. after 'ante' and 'post,' before or after that; so, also, with 'postridie' and 'pridie,' and even when these words are wanting: postero die quam illa erant acta; die tertio q. venerat. 3) (Colloq.) To strengthen a preceding adverb = very: nimis quam; valde quam; mire quam.

QUAMDE (Lucr.) = Quam.

QUAM-DIU, adv. 1) Interr., how long? 2) Relat., as long as.

QUAM-LIBET, adv. (Poet. & lat.) 1) As it pleases, at pleasure: q. infirmus; lambe otio q. 2) How much soever: occupat egressas q. ante rates, how far soever they may have gone.

QUAM-OB-REM, adv. 1) Interr., for what reason? wherefore? why? 2) Relat., on which account, wherefore, why: multae sunt causae q., etc. It is freq. found at the beginning of a principal sentence, to connect it with what precedes = on that account, therefore.

QUAM-PLÜRES, a, adj. in the pl. (Ante-cl. & lat.) Very many.

QUAM-PRIMUM, adv. (more correctly written separately). Forthwith, as soon as possible.

QUAM-QUAM, or QUANQUAM, conj. Though, although: q. id minime est probandum, tamen etc. (it is followed usually by the indic., yet also by the subj. when the construction requires that mood, e.g., in oratio obliqua; in poets and later writers, however, the subj. is freq. used in place of the indic.). In partic.: A) to add an independent, limiting remark or correction to what precedes, and yet, though, however; thus freq. at the beginning of sentences (q. quis ignorat, etc.) and in parenthetical sentences (q. quid loquor): B) (lat.) it is added to a part. or adj., without a verb: triumpho donatus est q. expers belli; (videt eum) q. affirmate resistentem.

QUAMVIS, adv. & conj. [quam-volo]. I. As adv., in connexion with an adv. or adj. — As you like, as much as you like, ever so: q. multos proferre possum, as many as you like; q. subito; q. multos enumerare licet, as many you please (q. belongs to the adj., not to the v., as licet); thus, also, q. licet insecutemur illos, we may attack them as violently as we will; hence = exceedingly, as much as possible. II. As conj., with a verb. — As much as ever you will, however much, although (prop., denoting a concession = it may be as much as you like; properly, therefore, connected with the subj., and only in poets and later writers with the indic.): q. illud occultetur; q. in rebus turbidis sint; q. sis prudens; erat inter eos dignitate regia, quamvis carebat nomine. Also, without addition of the verb (conf. quamquam, B): res gesserat, q. reipublicae calamitosae, attamen magnas, although.

QUA-NAM, interj. adv. By what way! in what manner!

QUANDO, adv. & conj. 1) Interj., when? 2) Relat., when, at what time (usually corresponding w. tum): quando esurio tum (intestina) crepant. 3) Indef., ever, at any time: ne q.; si q.; si q. unquam. 4) (Rar. in Cic.) As a causal conjunction = quoniam, because, since: q. ad majora nati sumus.

QUANDO-CUNQUE, adv. (Mostly poet.) 1) Relat., at what time soever, as often as, whenever: q. trahunt invisa negotia Romam. 2) Indef., at some time or other, in due time: q. mihi poenas dabis; written also separately, as, quando consumet cunque.

QUANDO-QUE, adv. 1) At what time soever, whenever, as often as. 2) At some time or other. 3) (Lat.) Sometimes.

QUANDO-QUIDEM, conj. Since indeed, seeing that.

QUAMQUAM — v. Quamquam.

QUANTILLUS, a, um, adj. [dim. of quantulus]. 1) Of size, how small. 2) Of quantity, how little.

QUANTITAS, âtis, f. [quantus]. (Lat.) Greatness, quantity: q. vocis, strength.

QUANTO — v. Quantus.

QUANTOPÈRE (more correctly, quanto opere). Prop., with how much labour; hence, as adv.

1) Interj., how much! how greatly! 2) Relat., tantopere ... quantopere, as much ... as.

QUANTŪLUS, a, um, adj. [dim. of quantus].

1) Interj., how small! how little! how trifling! q. nobis videtur soli! quantulum memoriae mihi est! 2) Relat., as much as; quantulum judicare possemus; quantulum visum est, as much as seems good to him.

QUANTŪLUS-CUNQUE, acunque, umcunque, indef. relat. adj. However small, how small soever; also, separately, quantum id cunque est.

QUANTUMVIS, adv. and conj. [quantusvis]. I. Adv. — As much as you will, how much soever, however: quantumvis exigua sint. II. Conj. — (= A strengthened quamvis.) Although: ille catus, q. rusticus.

QUANTUS, a, um, adj. [quam]. 1) Interj., used in exclamations, how great! how much! how many! quantum frumenti? how much corn? quanti emisti? at what price? scis quanti te faciam, you know how much, I prize you; quanti est sapere! (Com.) how valuable it is! Hence, ironically = how small, how little: homunculi qq. sunt quum recogito. 2) Relat., as great as, as much as, such as; freq., as correlative to tantus = as: tanta dimicatio quanta unquam fuit; nox quanta fuit, acta est per lacrimas, the livelong night; q. non unquam antea exorcitus venit; also, with a sup., tanta distantia quanta maxima esse potest, as great a difference as possible; quantis maximis itineribus poterat, the greatest he could. In partic., quantus quantum = quantuscunque. Hence, the n. substantively: A) abl. Quanto, with comparatives and the like — a) interj., how much! — b) relat., a) by how much, by as much as, according as: quanto major; quanto ante, post; β) (usually) corresponding with tanto, etc., the ... the: quanto gravior erat oppugnatio, tanto (eo, hoc) crebriores literae mittebantur: B) acc. and nom. Quantum — a) interj., how much! q. mutatus! how changed! — b) relat., as much as, as far as: q. in me est, as far as it is in my power; q. audio; q. possum; quantum ad P., as far as P. was concerned; q. est hominum, as many as there are of men; q. importunitatis habent, such is their insolence; (poet. & lat.) in q., as far as. Sometimes 'quantum' is used with comparatives, instead of 'quanto': quantum longius procedebant, eo magis, etc.

QUANTUS-CUNQUE, tuncunque, tumcunque, indef. relat. adj. How great soever: bona qq. sunt; ironically, q. victoria, how insignificant soever; hence, n. Quantumcunque, as adv., how much soever: q. possim.

QUANTUS-LIBET, talibet, tumlibet, adj. As great as you please, how great soever.

QUANTUSVIS, tavis, tumvis, adj. [quantus-volo]. As great as you please, however great, how great soever: quantusvis classi satis, for any fleet however great.

QUĀTUOR-VIRI, ōrum, m. pl. A board of four commissioners, who managed certain public affairs. The Quatuorviri of Rome superintended the highways. In partic., in the municipia = the board of chief magistrates.

QUĒ, conj. Appended enclitically to another word, and characterizing the second member of a proposition, as an addition to, a continuation or enlargement of, the first, so that both are to be considered as a collective whole ('particula adjectiva,' whilst 'et' is a 'particula copulativa') —and: senatus populusque Romanus; jus potestasque. In partic.: A) que ... et (connecting words only, but not sentences), que ... que (esp. in relative sentences, and in connecting two words, one of which is a pronoun), also (rar.), et ... que, both ... and, as well ... as: B) to denote a transition from something particular to something general = and in general: eloquentiam studisque liberalia exerceat: C) to explain what precedes = and indeed: D) 'que' is used, more freq. than 'et,' to express positively what the preceding sentence had expressed negatively (v. Et, 4) = but, on the contrary: non nobis solum nati sumus, ertusque nostri partem patria vindicat. (N. B. — 'Que' is rarely added to a monosyllabic preposition, but usually to the word governed by it; as, in reque, inter nosque. The poets have still greater license with regard to its position in the sentence.)

QUĒM-AD-MŌDUM, adv. 1) Interr., in what manner? how? 2) Relat., as, just as; in particular, freq. in quoting examples, in comparisons, &c.

QUEO, Ivi or ii, Itum, 4. v. tr. (When followed by an infin. pass., ante-cl. writers use the passive forms 'quitur,' 'quitus,' in the same signification.) To be able = possum, q. v. (usually connected with a negation, or a limitation, condition, &c.).

QUERCĒTUM, i, n. [quercus]. (Ante-cl.) An oak-forest, oak-wood.

QUESTUS, ūs, m. [queror]. A complaint, lamentation: effundere questus; vano q. clamitare; (poet.) of the soft, plaintive notes of the nightingale.

QUI (I), quae, quod, pron. [Sanscr. kas, Ion. κῆ, instead of κῆ]. I. Interr. pron. — 1) Mostly adjectively, what? which? (Ter.) quis fuit igitur? Py. Iste Chaerea — Th. Qui Chaerea? what Chaerea? 2) Substantively, when the question is about the rank or character of a person, and not his name, for which latter 'quis' is used: occiso Roscio, qui primum Ameriam nunciat? what kind of a man?

II. Relat. pron. — Who, which, that: colonia quam Fregellas appellat, and (the relative agreeing in person and number with the substantive in the relative clause) peroratio qui epilogus dicitur. Sometimes (by attraction, as in Greek) the relative agrees with its antecedent in case: hoc confirmamus illo augurio, quo diximus. Hence, in partic.: A) instead of a conjunction and a personal or demonstrative pronoun, to connect a sentence closely with what precedes — a) with the indic. = and (but, &c.), he (she, it): qui quum venisset, and (but) when he had come — b) with the subj., a) to denote a cause (instead of quam) = as or because he, &c.: execrari eum solebat qui primus utilitatem a natura sejunxisset; β) to denote a purpose or consequence (instead of ut) = that, so that, also = to and an infin.: equitatum qui sustineret hostium impetum misit, to sustain the attack of the enemy; dignus (aptus, idoneus) est qui amatur, to be loved: B) quae tua est humanitas, or qua es humanitate, such is your kindness: C) n. sing. quod = as much as, as far as: quod sciam, as far as I know: D) old abl. sing. qui (of. qui II.) — a) m. and (rar.) f., in connexion with the prep. cum (quicum; mostly after general expressions; as, ac nemo, aliquis, etc.) — b) n., in some combinations, where no subst. precedes: habeo qui utar, what I can make use of; vix reliquit qui efferretur, the wherewithal to be buried. III. Indef. pron. — v. Quis II.

QUI (II.), adv. [abl. sing. of the interr. pron. quis and the relat. pron. qui]. 1) Interr., how? qui fit ut, etc.? in indirect questions (ante-cl.), nec q. hoc mihi eveniat scio. Hence: A) to express a wish, O that, would that: q. dii istum perdant! elliptically, q. illi dii irati! (sc. sint): B) (Com.) why? wherefore? q. non? q. dum? why indeed? C) (Pl.) of price = quanti, how much? 2) Relat., why, wherefore: multa concurrunt qui conjecturam hanc nunc facio.

QUIA, conj. [prop. n. pl. of qui]. Because (to express a real cause or motive — cf. quoniam); freq. correlative to the particles ideo, idcirco, propterea, etc.: quia enim (Pl.), because forsooth.

QUI-CUNQUE, quaeq., quodq., pron. 1) Indef. relat., whoever, whosoever, whatever, whatsoever (both substantively and adjectively): q. is est, ei, etc.; omnia quaecunque loquimur, everything we may say; q. fortuna imminet. Hence = qualiscunque, of whatever kind: q. mens illa fuit, Gabinii fuit. 2) Indef., any whatsoever, every possible: quacunque ratione eos sanabo; q. modo, by all means.

QUI-DAM, quaedam, quiddam (subst.) or quoddam (adj.), indef. pron. A certain, a certain one (where a particular person or thing is thought of, but for some reason is not mentioned — cf. aliquis, quisquam): q. ex advocatis; quodam tempore; quiddam mali or malum, something bad. Freq. it is used (usually with quasi) to mitigate or to emphasize a figurative and improper expression = as it were (v. Quasi).

QUIDEM, conj. 1) It calls attention to the emphatic word of a sentence, which it almost invariably follows = indeed, and indeed, certainly, in truth: nunc q. Romae est; tres epistolae et q. uno die, and indeed; thus, also, do! eo ac mirifice q. 2) It indicates a limitation of a statement = at least: non video causam, cur ita sit, hoc quidem tempore. 3) A) ne ... quidem, not even (v. Ne): B) in concessive sentences it is freq. placed after a demonstr. pron., although it emphasizes another word (= it is true, to be sure): ludo et joco uti illo quidem licet, sed, etc.

QUIDNI — v. Quis I.

QUIES, *ētis, f. [root QUI, kindred w. quiesce, 1) Rest (from labour, exertion, excitement, &c. and usually in opposition thereto — cf. tranquillitas, requies), quiet, repose: quies senectutis, which old age affords; but, q. laborum (more freq. a laboribus), repose from hardships; mors est q. laborum ac miseriarum; somnus et ceterae qq., the other recreations. Hence, in partic.: A) rest at night — a) = sleep: capere quietem, to sleep; ire ad q.; tradere se quieti, to go to sleep; secundum q., in quiete, and (lat.) per q., in sleep — b) (poet.) = the sleep of death: dura q. — c) (lat.) = a dream, phantom, vision: B) (mostly poet.) = peace: q. diuturna: C) = retired life, neutrality between contending parties: Attici q. Caesari fuit grata. 2) (Lucr.) Qq. of animals = a lair, resting-place.

QUIESCO, ēvi, ētum, 8. v. intr. [quies]. 1) To rest, to repose from labour, toil, &c.: et agenti quiescendum et quiescenti agendum est. In partic.: A) of inanimate objects, to be still or quiet, to rest; ventus, bellum q.: B) to leave off working, &c., to rest: C) to undertake nothing, to keep quiet, to be inactive; esp. in a contest = to be neutral: q. in republica, to retire from political or public life; quiesce! keep quiet! D) = to sleep, and hence = to be dead, to rest in the grave: E) foedus q., remains inviolate: F) to be undisturbed by a thing: q. ab re aliqua. 2) Emphatically: A) (Pl.) to leave off, to cease, to desist from, potare, quiesce hanc rem modo petere: B) to suffer quietly, to permit: q. rem adduci ad interregnum.

QUIETE, adv. with comp. and sup. [quietas]. Quietly; hence — a) = without being disturbed, without battle: q. se recipere — b) = in a retired manner, vivere — c) = calmly, with composure, aliquid ferre.

QUIETUS, a, um, adj. w. comp. & sup. [quiesco]. Quiet, at rest (v. Quies, Quiesco), homo, animus; aetas q., old age. In partic.: A) = keeping quiet: rex sedit q.: B) of inanimate objects = slow, gentle, calm, amnis; q. statio, a safe anchorage; hence — a) of mental qualities = peaceable, calm, free from ambition; or, in a bad sense, slow, phlegmatic, without energy — b) of the circumstances in which one lives, quiet, private; or, neutral — c) (poet.) = sleeping: C) = undisturbed by, free from: omnia quieta a bello erant; republica quietâ, while the state is in peace.

habes enim a rhetoribus, of course, you have it, &c. 2) With the particles quia, quoniam, quum, ut, and with the relat. pron., it expresses a reason or cause still more strongly = since, inasmuch as, indeed, in fact: convivium cum patre non inibat, quippe qui ne in oppidum quidem, nisi perraro veniret.

QUIPPENI, adv. [quippe-ne]. (Ante-cl.) Why not? or, affirmatively, to be sure.

QUIPIAM — v. Quisquam.

QUI-QUI (Ante-cl.) = Quisquis.

QUIRINA, ae, f. A Roman tribe.

QUIRINALIS, e, adj. [Quirinus]. Of or belonging to Quirinus, Quirinal: Q. lituus, trabea, such as Romulus bore; collis Q., the Quirinal hill, one of the seven hills on which Rome was built, now Monte Cavallo. In partic., subet., Quirinalia, ium, n. pl., a festival in honour of Romulus, celebrated on the 17th of February.

QUIRINUS, i, m. [kindred w. Quiris]. 1) A name given to Romulus after his apotheosis. Hence: A) of other gods, esp. Janus: B) of distinguished persons, e.g., Augustus, Antonius. 2) As adj. = Quirinalis.

QUIRIS, itis, m. [from Cures, 'an inhabitant of the Sabine town Cures']. Hence, after the union of the Sabines with the Romans—1) generally in the pl., Quirites, ium or um, m., the Roman citizens, the Romans—a name held in high honour, as a distinctive name of the Romans as citizens; while in the field they were called 'milites' ('Quirites' was considered by soldiers as a term of derision), and in their relations to foreign nations 'Romani'—hence, jus Quiritium = full Roman citizenship. Thus, they said populus Romanus Quiritium, or, by way of apposition, populo Romano Quiritibus; pro patria Quiritibusque Romanis; populus Romanus Quiritesque. 2) In the sing. (rar.), a Roman citizen, who was in possession of full citizenship.

QUIRITATIO, ōnis, f. [quiritō]. A cry for aid, a plaintive cry.

QUIRITO, 1. v. intr. & tr. [originally, probably = fidem Quiritium implorare, 'to implore the assistance of the Roman citizens']. I. Intr. — To cry for aid, to raise a plaintive cry; also (lat.) = to scream. II. Tr. — To cry aloud, to cry out: quiritat 'civis Romanus natus sum.'

QUIS (I.), quae, quid, interr. pron. [corresp. with the Greek τίς]. 1) Subet., who? what? quis id fecit? (ante-cl. writers use 'quis' also as a fem.: quis tu es mulier?) Hence, in partic., the n. sing. quid: A) as subet., followed by a genit., what? = how much? how many? quid argenti? quid tabularum? scire quid ejus sit? what there is in it? B) as adv.—a) to denote indignation and astonishment, how! quid, eundem destituti! quid, quod? what do you say to this, that, &c.? quid si? how if? — b) = why? wherefore? (also, in quid, quid ita): q. venisti? sed quid ego argumentor, quid plura disputo? quid ni? (and quidni non?) why not? II. Adj. — What! what sort of? quid mulieris (Pl.), what sort of a wife? quis videor? how do I appear to you? quid est tibi nomen? what is your name?

QUIS (IL), subst. & adj., and QUI (subst. only when preceded by the conj. si, nisi, ne, or num), quae or quā, quid (subst.), and quod (adj.), indef. pron. Any one, some one; anybody, somebody; any thing, something. It denotes an undetermined person or thing, without emphasis; mostly after a relat. pron., after 'si,' and other particles: potest quis, cum divinationem habeat, errare aliquando; si quid in te peccavi, ignosce; si qui rex, si qua natio fecisset aliquid, etc.

QUIS-NAM, or QUI-NAM, (quaenam,) quidnam or quodnam, interr. & indef. pron. 1) Interr. (a strengthened form of quis), who, pray! what, pray! freq. separated (Pl.): quis ea est nam optima? (of a woman). The n. quidnam is used adverbially, why, pray? quidnam Pamphilum exanimatum video? 2) Indef. (only in connexion with the interr. num. and then mostly written as one word) = anybody, any thing.

QUIS-PIAM, quaequam, quidpiam (subst.) and quodpiam (adj.), indef. pron. (Rar.) Anybody, somebody, any thing, something (of an undetermined person or thing): dicimus, velle aliquid quempiam quia, etc.; res quaequam; neut. sing., Quidpiam, as adv. = somewhat, a little: q. nocere; q. impudicior.

QUIS-QUAM, quidquam or quicquam, indef. pron. (Without f. and pl. — usually subst.) Any one, anybody, any, any thing, something (expressing the idea of an indefinite pronoun in the most general and undetermined sense, so that a particular person is not thought of; hence, used esp. in negative, doubtful and interrogative sentences): quamdiu quisquam erit, qui te defendere audeat, vives; nemo tale quidquam conabitur; quisquamne istuc negat? nec q. unus, not a single one; nihil quidquam, nothing at all.

QUIS-QUE, quaeque, quidque (subst.), and quodque (adj.), indef. pron. 1) Whoever he be, each one, every one, everything (implying a distribution, therefore freq. with superlatives, ordinal numerals, and the reflect. pron. suus and se): suus cuique honos habetur; pro se quisque querantur, each on his part; quo quisque est solertior, eo, etc., any one, a man, &c.: ut quisque est optimus, ita difficillime alios suspicatur, the better one is, the less, &c.; decimus quisque; primus quisque, the first or earliest possible; primo quoque tempore (die), as soon as possible; with the sup. freq. in a general sense, and thus often collectively: doctissimus q., every learned man = all the learned; optimus q., the noble. 2) Sometimes = whoever, every one who (probably an abbreviation of the corresp. forms of quicunque): cuiusque populi cives vicissent (= cujuscunque).

QUISQUILIAE, āram, f. pl. [quisque = 'all sorts of things']. Offscourings, rubbish, refuse; hence, trop., of persons = refuse, drags, trash: qq. conjurationis Catilinae.

QUIS-QUIS, quidquid or quicquid, indef. relat. and indef. pron. (Of common occurrence only in the nom. and abl. m. & n., and in the acc. n.) 1) Indef. relat. (usually subst.), whoever, whosoever, whatever, whatsoever, every one that, all that: quisquis es; (poet.) deorum quidquid regit terras, all the gods who; quidquid progredior, the farther, the more; quidquid amare patrem et matrem videntur, much as they seem. 2) Indef., any one whatsoever, any thing whatsoever: quibusquibus Romanis liberos suos dabant; quoquo modo, in every possible way.

QUI-VIS, quaevis, quidvis (subst.), and quodvis (adj.), indef. pron. Any one or any thing you please, any whatever: non quivis hoc videt; quidvis petiti, dicere; q. unus.

QUIVIS-CUNQUE, quaeviscunque, quodviscunque, indef. relat. pron. (Poet.) = Quicunque.

RES, ei, f. [kindred w. PE-es, whence ῥήμα]. 1) A thing (in the widest sense of the word, 'any thing that exists or can be thought of as existing'): res quæ sunt; natura rerum, nature, the universe; imperitus rerum, ignorant of all things. Sometimes 'res' stands as a general expression, in place of the repetition of a word: multae artes — quibus rebus exulta est hominum vita. Sometimes we have 'ea (quæ) res,' where 'id (quod)' would be expected; as, nihil esse quod non facturi essent, dummodo ea res, etc.; and, on the other hand, the n. relat. pron. 'quod' refers to 'ea res.' In the poets, it is sometimes used as a paraphrase, e.g., res cibi = cibus. Hence, in partic.: A) state, condition, circumstance: rr. meae; r. bona; bonis tuis rebus (Pl.), while your affairs are in a good condition; freq., rr. secundae, prosperous circumstances, prosperity; rr. adversae, adversity; res salvæ sunt, everything is in a good condition; abi in malam r.! go, be hanged! pro (e) re nata, or simply pro re, under the circumstances: B) = cause, reason, ground; only in the combination ea (hac) re: eam (hanc) ob rem, on that account, therefore; quomobrem, wherefore, why: C) an affair, matter, business: res bellicæ, militaris, collect. = military affairs; thus, also, res maritima, etc.; res divina, a sacrifice; transigere r. cum aliquo, to transact business with any one; res mihi est (rem habeo) tecum, I have business with you; (poet.) esse rei alicui, to be good for something; res tuas tibi habeto (the usual formula of divorce); ab re visum est, it appears to be foreign to the matter: D) = a lawsuit, case cognoscere, judicare rem: E) = profit, interest, advantage, benefit: est in rem meam (mihi), it is to my advantage; thus, also, ex re: hoc est e republica, is best for the state; ob rem facere aliquid, to do any thing for profit; dummodo ob rem (sit), provided it is profitable; in rem suam convertere aliquid, to turn to one's own advantage; on the other hand, ab re (Pl.), to one's injury: F) wealth, property, substance: rem habere, augere; freq., res familiaris; res patriæ, inherited from one's father: G) = a state, commonwealth: r. Romana: summa rerum, supreme power; so, also, rerum potiri; Roma caput rerum, the chief of cities; in partic., r. publica (v. Respublica).

2) Reality, fact, actuality (in opp. to appearance, name, &c.): r. atque veritas; re quam famâ majores; nomen sine re, a name to which no existing object corresponds; re (vera, ipsa), in fact, indeed, really; res probat vocem auguris, the result, event. Hence = experience: res eum quotidie mitiorem facit.

3) A deed, action (in opp. to words): res secuta est clamorem; bene, male rem gerere, to execute an undertaking well, ill — freq. in reference to war, hence = to fight successfully or unsuccessfully, to conquer or to be conquered, and, in gen. = to be fortunate or unfortunate, to have a prosperous or adverse issue. In partic. = a great deed of a hero, statesman, &c.: gerere rr. magnas; res gestae = deeds, actions, exploits; auctor non scriptor rerum, the doer, not the historian, of great exploits. Hence = a life, history, Neronis, populi Romani.
